

Alice Mills is an associate in Cohen & Gresser's London office. She is a member of the firm's White Collar Defense & Regulation, Litigation & Arbitration, and Corporate practice groups.

Alice's practice focuses on trade and economic sanctions, white collar defense and regulation, and commercial litigation.

Previously, Alice served as a paralegal and trainee solicitor at Cohen & Gresser. During this time, she gained broad experience working on a diverse range of legal matters for both individuals and corporations, including employment and whistleblowing disputes, internal investigations, and fund structuring and investments.

Alice is closely involved in pro bono legal matters, most recently preparing the criminal appeal of an individual convicted based on evidence obtained through torture.

Alice received her Bachelor's degree in International Development, with First Class Honors, from the University of Leeds and completed her Graduate Diploma in Law, with distinction, from BPP Law School. She completed the Solicitors Qualification Examination in 2023, ranking in the top quintile of her cohort. Alice has experience working in Hong Kong and Madrid.
